Inviterer til frokostmøte 5. november 2015 kl. 09.00 på Høgskolen i Oslo og Akershus, Frokost serveres fra 08.30

TEMA: "Trust and Context in the World of Digital Archives"

Når vår dokumentasjon blir elektronisk tenker vi ofte at det er både likt og ulikt det vi hadde på papir. Men hva er prosessene som kan gi tillit til den elektronisk lagrede informasjon og dokumentasjon som havner i et arkiv?

“We are often told that information needs a higher standard of verification in digital realms than in the paper world. When users encounter digital records and archives, they may be uncertain how far they can trust them.

In the past, trust in records was said to be reinforced by trust in archivists and archival institutions, but trust in professional experts and institutions is waning; notions of expert objectivity are increasingly challenged. However, documentation of the provenance and context of records continues to form a basis for enhancing their transparency and thus for evaluating their trustworthiness.

Computer scientists are now asking similar questions about how data can be trusted and verified, and are increasingly seeing knowledge of provenance as a foundation for enabling trust.

In the longer term, research that is now being undertaken by computer scientists may help archivists meet the challenges of gathering and maintaining contextual information in the world of digital record-keeping. Methods of automatically harvesting certain kinds of contextual information are under investigation.

For archivists in the future, automated solutions are likely to expedite what are currently time-consuming manual processes.”
